Hack HSV

About

Hack HSV is Alabama's first high school hackathon hosted at Randolph High School in the rocket city of Huntsville, Alabama. It started in 2017 and is run by high school students for high school students. Being in a relatively remote area in terms of technological innovation, Hack HSV's mission is to unite Alabama's community of coders and creators to promote innovation and collaboration.

After last year's success with over 60 participants (a 50% increase from the over 40 students the previous year), we are proud to announce the third iteration of Hack HSV. This year, we expect to have even more participants extending from the far reaches of Alabama and even other states, such as Tennessee, have better prizes, and more.

Sponsoring Hack HSV means that you are a contributor to this movement towards computer science literacy. Here are some ways that you can get involved:

- 1. Mentoring

Having mentors is one of the most important aspects of Hack HSV. Many of the programmers that participate are beginners, and some have never even programmed a single line. In addition, mentoring is a way for companies to have direct interaction with students.

- 2. Swag Table

Whether it be T-shirts, stickers, or pens, developing brand recognition with participants is an effective way to build a relationship with participants (not to mention they love it!).
